

My name is Jeffrey Wise and I have been working at the Trump International Hotel in Las Vegas for 8 years.

My coworkers and I collectively decided that we wanted the rights and benefits that 57,000 other workers in this city have. So together we all voted to join the Culinary Union.

The voting process is a democratic one, where everyone's voice is important and deserves to be heard. I am pleased to know that even one of the Presidential debates will be held here later this year, it only further reiterates how important the voting process is and encourages Nevadans to get out and vote. The Culinary Union recognizes this importance and has always encouraged members of the media, political candidates, and attendees of the presidential debates to avoid staying in hotels engaged in active labor disputes such as any Station Casinos property and the Trump Hotel in Las Vegas. I do not believe the Trump International Hotel values my voice or my vote when we have won a federally approved election and still contract negotiations have not been made.

We need agencies like the LVCVA to protect the tourism industry. To not place conventions at locations involved in labor disputes. We ask that you value the voices of customers coming into our great city we share and be 100% transparent about hotels involved in labor disputes.
